Change to the Executive Board of Dräger

Rainer Klug to take over from Dr. Fehrecke

Lübeck – Rainer Klug is set to become the new Chief Supply Chain Officer (CSCO) at Dräger. As a member of the Executive Board, he will take over duties from Dr. Herbert Fehrecke, who will retire from the company as planned on March 31, 2015.

The Supervisory Board and the Executive Board would like to thank Dr. Herbert Fehrecke for his work on Dräger's behalf over the past seven years and wish him every success for the next chapter in his life.

Rainer Klug was born in Goslar, Germany, in 1968. He studied mechanical engineering in Hanover, Germany, as well as manufacturing and automation technology in Krakow, Poland. He started his career in the industrial and process technology division of KSB AG, one of the largest manufacturers of pumps and valves, where he was responsible for a wide range of duties in international production partnerships, production planning and logistics. As a project manager, he worked at various locations around the world. After that, he held various management positions in mechanical production and production management as well as assembly and testing.

Rainer Klug currently works at Giesecke & Devrient GmbH, where he is in charge of global operations activities at 19 locations in 14 countries. Giesecke & Devrient is an international technology group that manufactures chip cards and is specialized in the development of mobile security solutions, in addition to its traditional currency and securities printing activities.
